BREAKING INTO CATTLE SHOW PLANS

Foot and Mouth Disease Gives New England Fair Managers

A Problem—New London County Fair Management Discusses Situation—No Cattle Show at Worcester Possible This Year.

The directors of the New London County Agricultural Society held a meeting Tuesday morning in their new office at 45 Main street. The meeting was called to order by the vice-president of the society, James B. Palmer, the president, A. D. Lathrop, being out of town. Routine business was taken up and Morton P. Plant, of Branford Farms, was elected a member of the executive board.

The epidemic of hoof and mouth disease that made its appearance in our locality was discussed and the probable effect it would have on the cattle show at the local organization and other New England fair associations was a subject that elicited considerable argument.

It was learned that the Brookton fair officials are seriously considering the abolishing of the cattle show at their fair this year and that Superintendent Ross of the New England State Fair at Worcester reports that there will be no possibility of holding a cattle exhibition this year.

Many farmers are bawling the fact that as the law prohibits the driving of cattle along the highways they are losing quite a little money through being unable to do outside work this spring with their oxen.

There were present at the meeting the following directors, James B. Palmer, of Lisbon; Judge Holdridge, of Branford; Mr. George W. Beckwith of East Lyme; George Avery, Mr. Hoxie, treasurer Charles Greenman and secretary William W. Beckwith.

SPEAKER AT SHOP TALK

Rev. Dr. Slocum Addressed Men at Thamesville Cutlery.

The Pool of God was the subject of the shop talk given by Rev. Joel B. Slocum, D. D., pastor of the Central Baptist church at the Y. M. C. A. shop meeting held at the Cutlery plant on Tuesday afternoon.

Rev. Dr. Slocum said the expression "The Pool of God" originated somewhere in the middle ages, and in order to illustrate it he told a story that was very recently told to him. The story was in reference to the late Rev. R. B. Palmer, editor, one time, of the St. Louis Christian Advocate. He was a man into whose life there had been a strange commingling of adventure and devotion. For instance, he was hooked to sail on the ill-fated Titanic, but in Paris a cab horse knocked him down and the accident prevented his sailing on that ship. But the more interesting adventure by which he earned the title The Pool of God took place some years after the Civil war.

He was a Virginia planter and among his father's papers, a deed to almost six thousand acres of land located in western Virginia. Moreover, this was the only heir to the property. Putting the deed into his pocket, he made a trip to West Virginia to look over his vast estates.

Reaching the place, he found that hundreds of families had settled on it without any right to it, but were apparently convinced that they were secure in their possessions. He found the country was a lawless one and there was almost limitless wealth in the form of coal and oil. The people who lived on the land were ignorant of its value. He remained in the neighborhood several days in the process of his thorough examination. He suddenly walked about at night and through the windows saw happy children and their parents. The longer he stayed, the more troubled he became at the thought of dispossessing such a multitude of humble people. His lawyers were ready to institute legal proceedings that would have left him a millionaire. But he began to feel that he could not do this thing. Sleepless nights passed in his mind as he thought of the people who were to be dispossessed. He believed in prayer, and so he began to pray over it. It was not long before he was able to see the situation as it really was. He decided to allow the people to stay on the land, and he gave them legal titles. His lawyers and his friends called him "The Fool of God."

But the longer we reflect on the situation the more clearly convinced are we that he was a fool, he was a "fool of God."

It is somewhat refreshing in a land where the almighty dollar seems to have the middle of the road, to find a case like this—a man actually thinking more about humanity than about his own personal interests. It is certainly inspiring, once in a while, to find a man who worships men more than Mammon. It was a case like this that made the speaker feel that a man's life does not consist in the abundance of the things which he possesses, but in the quality of his life. He was a teacher that ever lived, is not the standard by which we are to estimate the worth of a man. Not by his means, but by his mission. Not by his stocks, but by his spirit. Not by his certificates, but by his character. During this week of Jesus' passion, let us enter into the deeper estimates of life with Him. He thought so much of the well-being of man that he laid down His own glory, that He who was rich, for our sakes became poor, in order that by His poverty we might become rich.

Droege of the Shore Line Division, Division Engineer Assistant J. H. Ely, and other officials of the railroad company. EXTEND TERMINAL TRACKS ON THE PARADE

At New London—Right is Asked in Petition Before Legislature—Hearing Given.

The Connecticut company was given hearing by the committee on railroads at the state capital Tuesday afternoon, on several matters of local interest, the matters being explained by Robert Perkins, of Norwich. The New London company asked for the right to extend the tracks from the terminal on the parade, down past the soldiers' and sailors' monument to the railway station and thence up Water street, where the company has a large freight depot.

Mr. Perkins said that this extension had already been made to relieve the freight congestion in State street and in response to the wishes of the people of New London, adding that the company also had a physical connection with Water street with the tracks of the Central Vermont railroad. He asked favorable action on the proposition in order to confirm absolutely the rights of the company and to remove any doubt as to its rights in the matter.

Another measure asked for by the company was for the right to extend their tracks through a portion of Crystal avenue and other streets, so as to make connection with the present railroad bridge over the Thames river at New London. To lay tracks and connect in Groton with the Groton and Stonington Street Railway company, the extension of the railroad route from Westerly to New Haven, in so far as the system is concerned, was a matter of great importance. He said the proposed plan if approved had been marked out in conjunction with the present Connecticut highway commissioner.

Mr. Perkins also asked for a construction of all rights granted to the company by the legislature of 1913, in the city of Norwich, the completion of the work in some instances and the extension of the work in others, being due to a lack of funds to carry on the plans as contemplated.

This included the extension to Maplewood cemetery, to Mohegan park and Fitchville.

There was no opposition before the committee.

At the close the aprons and neckties were matched up and all went to supper which consisted of salads, baked beans, corn, and other delicacies. Games furnished amusement for the evening folks for the rest of the evening.
